

association with vampirism and horror in general.

- The Symbolic Codes (Barthes) of horror, darkness and fear are more widely reinforced through signifiers such as the moon and the male victim's 'submissive sacrifice' gesture code.

Genre theory – Steve Neale

- Neale argues that audience pleasures are derived from generic repetition and difference. This film poster repeats much of the symbolism associated with Hammer and Universal horror films and the wider 'monster' and vampire genres, but adds difference through the connoted power of the female protagonist and the implied romantic narrative.

A level only:

Structuralism – Claude Lévi-Strauss

- The idea that texts are constructed through the use of binary oppositions could be applied to the opposing representations of the vampires and their victims, and the romantic connotations of "kiss" opposed in the film's title to the stereotypical "vampire" monster.

PART 2: STARTING POINTS – Representation

Political and social contexts:

The 1960s is often seen as the start of women's sexual liberation, aided by events such as the introduction of the contraceptive pill in 1960. More women than ever were entering the paid workforce and sixties feminists were campaigning for equal pay, an end to sexual harassment and more equality between men and women in wider society. In America, equal pay legislation was passed in 1963.

'Older' stereotypes of women as passive victims of men and more modern 'male fears' of women challenging male dominance could both be seen to be encoded in this film poster.

Consider how representations are constructed through processes of selection and combination:

- Both women wear pale dresses made of light materials and these dress codes serve to reinforce their femininity by highlighting the curves of their bodies and revealing the flesh of their upper chests and arms.
- The gesture code of the woman on the left is that of the stereotypical passive victim of the 'monster', his power highlighted by the fact that he's holding her by just one arm.

- Baring her teeth and with her arm raised almost fist-like as she's being bitten by the bat, the second woman's gesture codes are more aggressive, and the submissive pose of her male 'victim' (including being on his knees with his head back and throat exposed) represent her in a non-stereotypically dominant way.
- The vampire himself seems uncharacteristically fearful in his gesture codes with his arm thrown across his body in a defensive gesture, perhaps protecting himself from the female vampire.

Consider theoretical perspectives:

- Stuart Hall's theory of representation – the images of a castle, bats, the vampire's cape and dripping blood form part of the "shared conceptual road map" that give meaning to the "world" of the poster. The audience is actively encouraged to decode this familiar generic iconography.
- David Gauntlett's theory of identity – perhaps the female vampire acts as a role model for women struggling against male oppression or desperate to be seen as the equals of men, whatever the narrative or environment.

A level only:

- Liesbet Van Zoonen's feminist theory – by assuming this 'co-antagonist' role, the female vampire is perhaps contributing to social change by representing women in non-traditional roles (Van Zoonen, 1989) though the passive female victim does reinforce these.